

BLM#5: Examples of Wearable Art

		Wrigley's New Orbit Mist is being promoted with a print advertising campaign demonstrating the "hydrating sensation" experienced when chewing the gum. Three models pose for fashion photographer Nadav Kander with a packet of Peppermint Spray Orbit Mist, dressed in wearable art: adaptations of a shower curtain, umbrella and mop. The two flavours not represented are Mango Surf and Watermelon Spring.

		The French designer, Malam, makes very feminine, playful pieces from recycled and reclaimed fabrics and embellishments; in this example, a pink dyed rice bag

Andrea Zittel (American) mixes issues of architecture, design, fashion and ergonomics; creates installations and objects that challenge traditional uses of tools, garments and living spaces; makes unique items out of recycled garments; anti “sweatshops”

	Gum wrapper hat
	Dress modified to look like a hamburger
	The DIY Renewable Dress by Fernando Brizio has pockets sewn into the dress to hold washable markers. After about an hour, the marker ink has soaked into the dress creating a custom color scheme and pattern. The dress can then be washed giving you a clean palette to start all over again.
